“ Each of us knows that "we're all going to die someday", and we do our best to prepare for it. Spiritually, we live lives in Christ to be received into Heaven as He promised and live with Him in the hereafter. And we may even try to plan for the financial needs of those we'll leave behind when that "far off event" happens. But when a death occurs so suddenly and when it occurs so unexpectedly, no amount of preparation can ease our devastation. In the times when it feels as though you can't go on, draw upon the strength of Christ and receive His comfort. Also, keep your heart receptive to the love of those who care about you and be strengthened in the knowledge that each wants to share his or her strength with you until you're strong enough to continue again. And when there are days in the future where you feel the hurt return, please reach out to those same people. They haven't forgotten you- they're only going on with their daily lives. Each still cares, and each would gladly extend his or her hand to walk with you one extra mile. We ask blessings for each family member and friend who is hurting so much now, and we are praying that each will be strengthened first in Christ and thereafter by caring friends and family.

“ I will always remember our childhood memories growing up. Riding our bikes as fast as we can, playing in the dirt, going fishing sometimes with grandpa. All the times i got hurt and everyone helped me hide it from grandma haha. Me and Anthony we r to school together in high school we always talk. We also had the same class well he was in English class and I was in study hall. But we both was not as smart but we was smart. We couldn't spell very well but that never made us dumb. He was always there for anyone. He was always working. I do remember that we stayed the night at our grandparents house grandma made his favorite breakfasts pancakes but no one could wake him up lol grandpa tried everything: took the blankets off him, pulled him to the floor and I do remember he did the cold water thing lol but he was like the living sleeping dead lol. I remember we all would wrestle with my dad we would all take turns or pile all at once on him haha. So many memories to share. It just breaks my heart that he is gone now. Me and anonthy are near the same age. He couldn't say my name growing up so he gave me the family nick name ishy. I got no idea how you spell it but that name stuck to this day. Man I miss you
