“ Sharon and I met Larry and Jim (my husband) when Sharon and I moved from a brief stay in Florida to the Washington, DC, area in the spring of 1974. Shortly after moving to DC, we became a foursome and double dated every weekend for months, touring many of the historical sites in the greater DC area, including Monticello and Mount Vernon. We had a blast!!

Jim and I were married a year later, in June of 1995. (Sharon was my maid of honor.) Larry and Sharon were married that August. Jim and I later moved to Texas, but kept up with the Armes through yearly anniversary cards. We also got to visit with Larry and Sharon a couple of times over the years in their charming home in Alexandria.

We reconnected with Larry after Sharon's death. We last spoke with him just two weeks before he died.

Larry and Sharon were two of our dearest, closest friends and we will miss them both and will certainly think fondly of them often.

“ Pauline and family, You all probably know how much I thought of Larry. He was always such a sweet heart. He was so smart and good looking. Don't know when I saw him the last time. I hope the family are all well. Wish I could be with you all. Take care. Love, “ Larry was my uncle and the funny stories I could tell about him. From being small to him holding me up to a tree and trying to shove my barefeet into a tree to make me giggle or "bearding me" He used to always make sure I had my 5 fruits and veggies and I always had to count on my plate and tell him. One thing that was funny and he and I actually just laughed about this a couple weeks ago. When I was little, he used to always tell me I was going to be an entrepreneur when I grew up and I didn't know what that meant and I used to tell him to "not tell me that because I thought he meant I stunk" Larry and Sharon were such a joy to be around. Even when I lived in Arlington, we would make a point to do weekly dinner and talk about his store. I've never seen someone in my life that had never let blindness stop him. He was remarkable. He and Sharon were a team to say the least. I miss them both terribly. The love they had for one another was one you would see in the movies.
